

High School Dropouts

The percentage of high school dropouts has increased and we need a solution. As we head into the future many adolescents are dropping out of school thinking that they will never succeed in life or that they are not good enough. According to HawaiiFreePress.Com the Hawaii highschool dropout rate has risen to 32.5% in 2013, which is high. To be able to change this rating, we need to start influencing the determination of young adults in Hawaii to start studying harder. These young people need an education to help them to accomplish great things in their lives.

We need to put an end to high school dropouts and start making the graduation rate grow exponentially. A good education allows children to increase their knowledge and become intelligent future leaders of our nation.

If we don't resolve this problem, we would have a future with fewer leaders and more homeless. This would be a horrific problem because I know that all the children in Hawaii can be very successful if they put in the work and stay in school.

We can clear up this problem by establishing, "People of the Future Groups" in every school which would be founded by the Clarence T.C. Ching Foundation. This group would talk about the importance of education and how we can succeed and become better leaders of the future. In these groups we can bring in government officials, doctors, lawyers and anyone who used education to help benefit to their success today. If these successful people are not able to visit the schools then they can make podcasts and PSA's (Public Service Announcements) about the importance of education and how it can make a better future.

This solution reminds us of the legacy set by Mr. Clarence T.C. Ching because he always believed in the development of children and allowing everyone to make a difference in Hawaii. He was a very successful man because he used his education and turned the knowledge he gained into reality. He didn't only flourish in his career but he also helped those who couldn't afford an education.

We can give many things to a person but the most influential gift is to help one another gain an education, so we can all endeavour to succeed in our lives. We should not give up on helping anyone even if times get harder. Clarence T.C. Ching's father believed in him and believed in providing his children with an education to help benefit them and Hawaii. His educational foundations grew into a successful business career which led him to leave a legacy that would be remembered for decades. I believe that each and every one of us can grow to become great leaders. All we have to do is study hard, stay in school, and strive to reach the top.
