What Goes Around Comes Around

Random acts of kindness are what the whole world needs these days. With all of the hate and poverty in the present day, everyone could use some help from one another. There are many ways that one could demonstrate any act of kindness. It does not matter if it is providing a meal for someone, helping someone with work, or just cheering someone up with a letter. All of these things will make someone feel better, and good things may eventually come your way. Kindness can teach people many life lessons, and if everyone can learn from the good that others do, then the world will be a much happier place.

Helping someone out who cannot provide for themselves or their family is probably one of the politest things to do. Not knowing someone's financial situation, and just providing a meal for them is one of the best acts of kindness. Expecting something in return is not advisable because the whole aspect of an act of kindness is going out of your way to make someone’s day better. Doing kind gestures like providing a meal for someone may eventually end up in good karma towards your way, but doing good out of the free will of one's heart is what truly matters.

Performing random acts of kindness can result in help towards your way when you truly need it. By helping someone who is down at a certain point in their life, it can give that person a choice to help someone out when they get back on their feet. That person they may help could help you at any point of your life. You never know what will happen when performing acts of kindness because things will come back to you in this life. The tables could turn, and a good deed could go either way at that point whether it is big or small. It is a small world, and being there for others may end up in others being there for you.

There are many life lessons when an act of kindness is shown. Being kind to others may not only result in help towards your way, but it can also change others for the better. There are people who try to intimidate others by staring them down because they feel superior. Showing an act of kindness towards people like that may have them reflect on themselves. They may ask themselves why they act the way they do, and it may result in a change in their attitude. Doing that to one person is good, but changing one person may influence his or her friends to change as well. There is no reason to act like a jerk towards someone or come off as a bully because that may affect you in the long run. For example, say you are going for a job interview and that person interviewing you is the one that you used to pick on. That person will likely remember those things that you have done to him or her, and it is highly unlikely that you will get that job. Not getting that job will make you rethink the decisions that you have made when you were younger. Growing up and not acting like a punk towards others will only help you in the future.

It is either naughty or nice in this life, and the karma that you receive could go either way. Being very kind may result in kindness back to you, but acting like a jerk may result in bad going your way. Good or bad may not come back to you, but being kind to everyone will make this world a much better place. Violence such as bullying would not be a problem if everyone is nice to each other. The world may never get to that point, but doing your part by being nice to everyone will hopefully end up in everyone being kind to others. It only takes one person to make a difference, and kindness can go a very long way.
